"WAR DANGER WILL PASS IF RECOVERY IN U. S. SUCCEEDS"

Is Belief of King Boris of Bulgaria; Grants First News Interview

FOLLOWS EVENTS

Believes Recovery Here Will Lead To A More Stabilized World

(Note: Danger of war will pass if the American recovery program succeeds, King Boris of Bulgaria tells H. R. Knickerbocker in the first interview he has ever granted to a newspaper man.

In the twenty-fourth article of his series "Will War Come" Knickerbocker tells how the Bulgarian monarch is closely following events in the United States in the belief that recovery there will lead to a more stabilized world.

By H. R. Knickerbocker (I. N. S. Staff Correspondent) (Copyright, 1934, by I. N. S. Reproduction in whole or part forbidden.)

SOFIA, Mar. 10.—(INS).—To a workman in America the N. R. A. today means shorter hours, higher wages, more employment.

To the King of Bulgaria the N. R. A. today means that war may after all be avoided in Europe.

Few Americans absorbed in the business of recovering from the worst crisis in history realize the world-wide interest and the international political significance of the American economic experiment. Here in Bulgaria the sovereign, King Boris III, puts President Roosevelt's plan at the head of the list of his reasons why war will not come to Europe.

He considers it the strongest hope for peace, and the most promising guarantee against revolution. Here in this remote part of Europe seven thousand miles from the United States, the American President and the American people have a strong sympathizer. King Boris feels so strongly about it that today he made an exception to his lifelong rule against receiving correspondents and for the first time permitted himself to be quoted.

A young sovereign, barely forty, King Boris has a manner unassuming as that of any citizen. It justifies the paradoxical statement his prime minister, Nikola Mushanoff, made to me that "the kingdom of Bulgaria is a democracy." He walks nearly to the door to greet his visitor and his hospitable handshake dismisses formality.

From the walls of the study, covered to the ceiling with scores of portraits, the eyes of nearly every crowned head in the Europe of the last half-century stare down upon us. They are all resplendent in crowns and gold and jewels. They stare down upon their royal relative dressed in a double-breasted gray business suit wearing but one "decoration"—a broad plain gold wedding ring.

King Boris speaks good English but prefers German. His face is lean, the features quick to smile and his sensitive hands move with a swiftness that betrays an inner tension.

It is the tension of a restless intelligence. He reads voraciously, everything, in English, French, German, Italian and the Slavic languages. He has even read the reports of your correspondent. He is interested in everything. His curiosity covers the world. But of all the countries he is most interested in the United States and Russia.

War was our topic but the N. R. A. and the planned national economy of the Soviet Union took up most of our conversation.

"We have the unlucky experience of living in a transitional age when the old has passed away and the new has not yet arrived," observed the king.

He passed his hand over his face and in the gesture all the history of the last forty years flickered by. Beside us on a huge desk lay innumerable paper cutters, curious pens and pencils, family mementoes of generations of Saxe-Coburgs. On the wall Nicholas II of Russia sat his throne.

"There are two mighty forces operating in the world, the one pulling backward and the other pushing forward." The king bent his fingers in a clutching movement then pushed his fists outward.

"The great thing to do is by understanding and cooperation and good will to try to avoid the breach that would result if these two forces were to go too far against each other." The king paused. About all his talk was a quality of earnestness that made one believe he had thought much and felt deeply.

"Now the most interesting experience that is being made anywhere in the world to reconcile these two forces and to achieve a solution of the crisis without revolution, is in America. If it is possible for America through its NRA to reconcile these forces and to create a new order by agreement, without the force and violence which accompany revolutions it would be of as much importance for

LEGION AIR

(By ELMER)

Look for this column in the future and learn more of the veterans organizations—their purpose, benefits to be derived from membership, and legislation affecting veterans and their dependents.

Why should those so privileged join the American Legion?

Unfortunately it is necessary in this great nation of ours for those of us who came back safe and sound to fight again for justice for our comrades less fortunate. They have a right to expect that much of us and we cannot desert them now. And

Because you want to end war. The American Legion is working steadily and steadfastly for a means by which international differences can be settled without resort to arms, AND

Because you want to be known as a worker for the community in which you live.

The American Legion is 100% for Preparedness in other words adequate national defense. The men and women who took part in the last war do not want another. They say experience is a good teacher, if such is the case, who are better fitted to talk of preventatives for war than those who took part in one.

A casket flag for the burial of a veteran can be secured through the Postmaster at Doylestown or through the veterans facility located in Philadelphia. Be sure and have veteran's Honorable Discharge when making application.

In order to avoid trouble and worry veterans who have married since 1925 should see to it that their beneficiary is changed on their Adjusted Service Certificate or Government Insurance. This should also be done in the event beneficiary first named has died.

Bracken Post takes an active part in all community affairs and if all eligible veterans in Bristol and surrounding towns joined, what a power for good it would be.

There are many business and professional men members of the Legion but for some reason unknown to both themselves and the Legion they stay away. These men owe it to the Legion and to themselves to take more interest in veterans' affairs. Here's hoping they put in an appearance occasionally. Meetings are held the first and third Tuesdays of every month and the Post Home is open at all times.

Join the Legion and grow with your community.

300,000 IN STATE TO HAVE RELIEF GARDENS

Plans for Thrift Gardens are Going Forward in All Sections of State

SEED CONTRACTS LET

HARRISBURG, Mar. 10.—(INS).—At least 300,000 needy Pennsylvanians within the next two months will turn to gardening in the State Relief Board's thrift garden to augment food relief supplies.

With contracts for seeds already let, the plans for the 1934 thrift garden program are going forward in all sections of the state. County committees have been named to draw up plans for their own districts.

This year's thrift gardens, according to relief officials, will be the most elaborate ever grown. Fourteen kinds of produce is included in the original setup, including lettuce, tomatoes, peppers, beets, carrots, cabbage, beans, cucumbers, parsnips, turnips, radishes, Swiss chard, squash and corn.

Onions were discarded from the list when the price of onion seed was found to be prohibitive.

The gardens will vary in size from small backyard patches to areas covering an eighth of an acre. Last year, thrift gardens enabled 340,530 families to plant vegetables of their own. The total value of the crop was $8,400,000.

Eligibility to receive seed supplies this year will be restricted to persons eligible for any form of relief, according to W. R. Whitacre, in charge of the program. Members of the state advisory committee are: W. P. Hirsch, Pittsburgh; Miles Horst, Harrisburg; M. S. McDowell, State College; R. Bruce Dunlap, Department of Welfare; W. B. Nissley, State College, and W. S. Hagar, Department of Agriculture.

Bracken Post and Auxiliary Will Journey to Norristown

All members of Robert W. Bracken Post, American Legion, and Auxiliary who plan to journey to Norristown on Wednesday evening, are asked to meet at the Bracken Post home at 6:30 o'clock. All members who have automobiles are asked to be present, and see that other members have means of transportation.

The Legion will entertain the Auxiliary women on the fifth of April at the post rooms.

EDGELEY, Mar. 10.—The play, "For Rent, Furnished," given by the Bible Class, Edgely Union Church, for three nights, was well attended, there being a capacity house each evening. All parts were well taken, and an orchestra furnished music. Last evening, Miss Dorothy Richardson, Trenton, N. J., a young woman of great musical talent, was pianist, and was well received.

Miss Eva Moore, as the young flapper, took her part very well, as did Jacob Bustran as the Rev. Joshua Stevens, and a great deal of credit is given the entire cast. Many bouquets were presented to the actors and actresses on Thursday and Friday evenings.

RELENTLESS WAR IS URGED AGAINST CRIME

Wide Support of Movement Is Also Advocated

CAN PROVIDE A CHECK

(Note: This is the final story of a series of three articles based on an interview with and information obtained from U. S. Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York, chairman of the Senate committee investigating crime and racketeering.—International News Service.)

By Jack Vincent (I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

CLEVELAND, March 10.—(INS).—There are two "brakes" that can stop the current crime wave in the nation. One could easily provide an immediate check against lawlessness and the second prevent a recurrence of crimes waves in future years.

The first, comprising a determined offensive by all law enforcement agencies, must be accompanied by a public revolt against gangland such as the wave of sentiment that overthrew prohibition.

Those are the beliefs held by U. S. Senator Royal S. Copeland, who, as chairman of the Senate's crime and racket probing committee, has spent several months in the study of crime conditions in America.

Before the police can make any headway, he thinks, they must have the widespread support of the citizenry. Sen Copeland believes, too, that the revolt will come but that there must be other overt acts by the underworld before the populace will become sufficiently aroused.

He also suggests a revamping of the criminal statutes so that they would be fair to the poor and rich alike and prevent those types of crimes that are "within the law."

The second cure, according to Dr. Copeland, can be found in education. In that connection he recommends a modified berrillon system for the public schools of the country.

He says that records of schools should include not only the classroom grades but also a behavior card designed to show "the blossoming character of the child."

"The child who shows anti-social (or criminal) tendencies may then be given such treatment as the individual case requires," asserted the Senator. "Under this system, prevention of crime can be undertaken in time to produce results."

The behavior record, under his plan, would follow the student through the grade schools, high schools and even the colleges. The system, he urged, should be set up on a national scale with co-operation between communities and states so that no child would be able to lose his record by changing schools.

Dr. Copeland blamed the schools of the past for producing a "citizenry with sharpened wits rather than a realizing sense of social obligation and good citizenship." He added that "I contend there is something more vital in education than sharpening the mind."

"The importance of the work of the schools," he continued, "is emphasized by the statistics of crime. In the United States today the average age of the criminal is 23 years. The largest group is found at 19 and the next largest group at 18."

"The menace of crime, I reiterate, is greater than ever before. The greatest need in prevention is the necessity to curb juvenile delinquency. To accomplish this, the schools can do more than all other agencies within public control."

"If we can make a successful attack on juvenile delinquency," he concluded, "the next generations will bless us for our efforts."

"If we, too, succeed in deepening the public spirit of our children and developing that high sense of trusteeship which will stand the test during competitive years of later life, we shall have saved the nation from a repetition of the alarming disclosures of vicious conduct in high places."

"We also shall have had a large part in lifting America from the bondage of crime."

Newtown Council Names W. S. Tomlinson as Burgess of Borough

WOMAN HURT IN CRASH

Bucks Co. Firemen to Meet in Quakertown in Quarterly Session

Newtown Borough Council elected William S. Tomlinson to fill the unexpired term of the late Henry Afflerbach as Chief Burgess. Mr. Afflerbach died several weeks ago after a long illness. The term will expire on January 1, 1935.

During this meeting of Council a resolution on the death of Mr. Afflerbach, who for many years served as a councilman, as president of Council and Chief Burgess, was adopted.

The report of the treasurer, W. Aubrey Merrick, showed a balance of $553.15. Since the taxes for the present year will not be received for several months, the treasurer was authorized to borrow $2000 from the Newtown Title and Trust Company to meet the bills until the taxes are received.

Mr. Craig, chairman of the street committee, reported that most of the expenditures of his committee for the month was the purchase of necessary supplies and paying John A. Hennessey, the street commissioner for supervision of the C. W. A. labor.

Due to the large repair bill of the large pumper, Council instructed the property committee to ask the firemen to confine the use of the pumper to the borough.

Application was made to the C. W. A. to supply labor to install an underground drain from a point on East Washington avenue, west of Maple avenue, to the Norwood avenue gutter drain. This is for the purpose of disposing of the water which comes from a spring located on Green street.

The C. W. A. was also asked to provide the necessary clerks to recodify the borough ordinances, bringing them up to date.

Other projects asked for were the continuance of all unfinished projects and labor to lay 700 feet of new gutters.

The finance committee was unable to present the budget for 1934 on account of the heavy snows that covered the streets for the past several weeks and the need of examination to find the necessary repairs.

This budget will be presented at the

HUNDREDS OF LETTERS STOLEN AT ARDMORE

Charred Remains of One Lot Found in Public Wash Room

START INVESTIGATION

ARDMORE, Mar. 10.—The Ardmore post office was robbed early today by thieves who broke in by forcing a window open. Hundreds of letters, none of them believed to have been registered, were stolen.

A few hours after the robbery, the charred remains of one batch of stolen letters was found in the bath tub of a public wash room in an apartment building; another batch of letters was discovered by Charles Schwartz, hardware dealer, in an alley to the rear of his store.

The robbery was discovered by G. C. McKeon, mail dispatcher, when he opened the post office. Authorities believe the thieves burned several of the letters after opening them.

Postmaster D. McDonough began an investigation to learn exactly which letters had been stolen and whether or not any of them contained money.

ANOTHER REVIEW OF OPERA PRESENTATIONS

Reviewer Not Particularly Pleased With Opera "Merry Mount"

PRESENTS HIS OPINION

By Dr. Joseph Pasceri
The opera, "Merry Mount," which I really think is not worth hearing the second time was followed by "Romeo et Juliette."

The libretto of this opera adheres closely, for operatic purposes, to the Shakespearean drama. The music, written by Gounod, cannot rival that of "Faust," which is his masterpiece, but is enjoyable mostly for its melodious score, though in many parts has dramatic color and power and gives to the protagonists much opportunity for their voice and action.

It was not a brilliant performance, although thoroughly prepared, well directed by Maestro Hasseimans and effectively sung by all the artists connected with it.

Puccini's "La Boheme" with Lucrazia Bori as "Mimi," Nina Morgan as "Musetta," Jagel as "Rodolfo," Borgoli as "Marcello," Lazzari as "Collins" and Piceo as "Schaunard," followed "Romeo et Juliette."

The text of "Boheme" was taken by Giocosa and Illica from Murger's "La Vie de Boheme," and describes the life of the Quartier Latin of a century ago in Paris.

The principals of this delightful opera are two poor working girls, and an inseparable quartet of poor and easy going students, who cheerfully suffer hunger and cold, and whose life in its careless gaiety is mixed with pathos.

The music is always lively and dramatic; always beautiful and full of tenderness and sweetness that charms and fascinates the hearers.

It was a performance of considerable interest, and the audience was cordial showing its appreciation for the splendid work of all the artists, particularly that of "Mimi" sang by Mme. Bori. All were admired, enjoyed and applauded.

Maestro Bellezza directed with complete and sympathetic understanding, and brought out all the various and many beauties of the score.

Last Tuesday night was given and brilliantly sung that perennially brilliant opera "Lucia de Lammermoor," revealing its everlasting vitality anew.

OPPONENTS OF LIQUOR STORE NOT TO PROTEST

New Site is Selected in Newtown; Now 130 South State Street

ORIGINAL STANDS

Bank Declined to Lease Its Site After Protest Was Made

NEWTOWN, Mar. 10.—Opponents to the location of a state liquor store here do not plan to lodge any protest against the selection of a new site at 130 South State street.

Members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the churches who lodged a formal protest against the location of a liquor store here when a site at 34 and 36 South State street was selected, contend that in their protest they did not file objection to the site, but did oppose the location of a liquor store in the borough. "Therefore our original protest stands," stated an active opponent today.

In December the State Liquor Control Board announced that a state liquor store would be located at 34-36 South State street. Those who objected immediately became active and circulated a petition which was signed by a number of residents. The property selected at this time was owned by the First National Bank and Trust Company, and the board of directors declined to lease it to the state for liquor store purposes. This, therefore, held up the location of a liquor store here.

Yesterday the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board through Robert S. Gawthrop, chairman, announced that a site at 130 South State street has now been selected, and that a State Liquor Store will be opened there.

In the petition which was signed by nearly 300 residents it was set forth that this borough is one of the oldest settlements in the state, and that this year it will celebrate its 250th anniversary. The petition recited that a liquor store would attract to the borough a type of people not desired by the residents here. It was set forth that the borough would also be required to maintain a police force; and it was stated that the town is a religious center, and the location of George School, where there are 350 students. Those favoring the location of the liquor store here claim that the petition was signed by a small proportion of the residents and that at the last election those in favor of repeal outnumbered the drys by 100.

DAVIS HITS NEW DEAL

John W. Davis, once the Democratic presidential nominee and an influential figure in the councils of his party, is among those who refuse to put blind faith in the new deal and to accept it as marking the perfect path back to prosperity and national welfare.

"Wisdom in government, I submit," he says, "consists in discovering the natural laws and following them, not in devising hasty expedients whereby they may be circumvented."

Any unbiased observer of recent events in Washington will be struck with the directness and clarity with which Mr. Davis treats the present experiments in government. He sees, as have many other sincere critics of administration policies, a threat to "that personal liberty which Americans of past and present days have been taught hitherto to hold as the most precious of earthly possessions." This threat resides in the regimentation that marks the new deal.

The payment of bonuses to farmers, Mr. Davis said in illustrating a point, simply means that "one man's burden has been shifted to another man's back," and "as a permanent policy it is obviously unthinkable."

"The law of supply and demand can not be thwarted by government price-fixing or even by experiments with the currency," he declared. "Those who bite on that rock are sure to break their teeth."

Mr. Davis' views are important as showing that here are men high in the president's own party who do not agree with him in the radical experiments marking his administration, and that there are critics of his policies who are not moved by political motives.

HIGHWAY PERILS

The Travelers Insurance company, in analysis of 1933 automobile accidents, shows that highway safety is decreasing notwithstanding the many legislative and other means resorted to in an effort to increase it.

The number of automobiles in use in the United States in 1927 totaled 23,200,000. In 1933, the total was 23,800,000, or an increase of but 2.6 per cent. During the same period the number of persons killed in auto accidents jumped from 25,533 to 29,900, or 17 per cent.

Looking into the causes of the accidents, it was found that 33 per cent. of the persons killed last year lost their lives through accidents in which the drivers exceeded speed limits. Eighteen per cent. of the deaths occurred when cars left the road; 13 per cent. were due to vehicles being on the wrong side of the road, and an equal percentage was caused by failure of drivers to give right-of-way to vehicles entitled to it.

It is clearly evident from the figures that the exercise of greater care in driving is needed if the death rate is to be reduced. How to bring this about is the puzzling question. And it seems likely to remain such.

Senatorial and gubernatorial contests in this spring's primary in Pennsylvania threaten to be so close that they may have to resort to counting the ballots instead of weighing them.

When future interviewers ask Leslie Howard Gargan when he made his screen debut, he can truthfully say: "I don't remember."

The eight-months-old son of William Gargan broke into the movies this week when he worked for 20 seconds (all the California law allows) in the film version of Somerset Maugham's "Of Human Bondage."

It is to his god-father, Leslie Howard, that the youngest Gargan owes his early start on an acting career.

Leslie Howard, the youngest Gargan, has his early start on an acting career. Leslie got the idea and put it through with the aid of Mrs. Howard, Mrs. Gargan and a special nurse hired to be on the set.

The trio told the baby's father nothing about it until the scene was shot. Then they presented him with the first money his son ever earned—a $10 check from the R-K-O studio and a $50 bonus from Leslie.

Discovered, at last, why motion picture stars go in for butlers. If they didn't have them, they'd be forever locked out of their houses. So you gather from talking to Karl Farmer, locksmith at the Paramount studio, whose master key has to fit 3,000 doors.

The terrors of Farmer's life were the Marx Brothers who lost 40 dressing-room keys during their stay at the studio. Marlene Dietrich is next. She has misplaced 26 and is swelling the list so rapidly that Farmer keeps a dozen keys to her dressing-room always on hand.

The only star who never lost one was Gary Cooper.

Farmer has developed a strange affection for certain keys, almost as if they were living things. He'll tell you that he always thought Emil Jannings a cold, self-centered man until he went to repair the German actor's door one day and noticed a key-ring with 18 keys.

He asked what they were for and found that Jannings only used three of them. The others were for a house the actor once owned, for a trunk that he used many years, for a favorite desk, etc.

Jannings admitted that he kept them only for sentimental reasons. "I was glad I went over there that day," says Farmer, "because I found that Jannings had a soul."

The adventures of a Hollywood locksmith, it seems, are not without their comedy.

One New Year's Eve, Farmer was called at home by W. C. Fields. The actor begged him to hurry over to the studio because he and a group of friends had playfully locked a companion in a closet and, in trying to release him, had broken off the key.

Late as it was, Farmer answered the call. He found Fields pacing the floor before the closet. There was no one else in the dressing-room and no sound from the imprisoned man.

Fields insisted he must have fainted and begged Farmer to hurry.

Two minutes later, the locksmith had removed the broken key and unlocked the door.

There was no sign of a man inside, but on the shelf was a collection of choice liquor.

Fields went in beaming.

The first stage appearance here of Stefani Duna, Francis Lederer's favorite actress, will be in the Tengel-Tangel theater, a madcap night-club where a group of youthful enthusiasts, are putting on an intimate revue under the guidance of Frederick Hollander. Lederer presided at a tea to introduce the group to the motion picture and drama writers here.

It is amusing, the situation that has grown up between Lederer and the press.

The first interviewers came a way singing the praises of an actor who could talk so authoritatively upon a subject such as world peace.

The next batch, seeking a more romantic angle, were baffled not to be able to divert the Czechoslovakian star from his hobby.

Now, interviewers come away positively crying for war.

In his turn, Lederer is just as baffled.

"Don't these writers want to talk about anything but love, babies, marriages and divorces?" he demands.

DID YOU KNOW—

That, in a dull theatrical season Jeannette MacDonald once spent the three hottest months of a New York summer working as a model for fur coats?

BUTTONS FORM MOST ATTRACTIVE PATTERN ON GOWNS AND COATS

By Nadia De Beand

PARIS — (INS) — Buttons form the most attractive patterns on the gowns and coats shown by Jenny for Summer wear. They are not only used to close coats in V-shaped lines—beautiful silver ones, but also close gowns in the back, in serried ranks and decorative blouses in front. And still other bright metal buttons are sewn onto the puffed sleeves to form designs.

For day wear, taffeta gowns are much favored, and suits often have lame blouses of discreet design, with high necklines. Many of the gowns have beautiful openwork on borders and hems, forming intricate designs. Lames are much in evidence for evening wear, and little fur cape-jackets retain their popularity. The evening gowns are always cut away under the arms and very high in front with simple bands to cover the bare back.

Soldiers' Bonus Bill Backers Claim Majority of 2 to 1

By William S. Neal

WASHINGTON, Mar. 10.—(INS)—A majority of almost two to one for the $2,400,000,000 Soldiers Bonus Bill in the House on Monday was claimed by backers of the measure after a check-out today.

While plans were being made for a showdown on the bonus issue, Democratic leaders renewed their efforts to heal the break with the White House on the veterans' economy and federal pay cut issues.

The two veterans' issues gave leaders their hardest task of the session to hold the heavily Democratic House in line for the President's program.

With President Roosevelt threatening to veto both the bonus and the veterans' economy modifications, House leaders adopted a hands-off policy on the bonus. They expect the Senate to stop the bill.

Since the Senate already has voted restoration of the 15 per cent. pay cut and modified the veterans' economy act at a total estimated cost of $350,000,000, they determined to make super-human efforts to devise a compromise measure.

While Rep. Patman (D) of Texas, declared bonus advocates would fight for payment of the adjusted certificates with newly issued money, counter-efforts were under way for payment by a bond issue.

"The bonus bill will pass by a vote of from three to two to one," said Patman. "We provide in the bill for issuance of new money but give the President the alternate power to use authority given under the Thomas amendment to pay it by substantially the same method."

Forecasting Republican opposition to the "printing press" method, Rep. Snell of New York, Republican leader, said: "They might get somewhere if they provided payment of the present value and not the 1945 value."

"LINDY" IN WASHINGTON

Washington, D. C., Mar. 10.—With four new deaths yesterday, bringing the total fatalities, since the army began flying the airmail, to ten, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh was in Washington today. President Roosevelt was ready to receive him if he asked for an appointment.

FIRST COUNTY TREASURER TO DIE IN THIRTY YEARS

The death of Ex-county Treasurer John B. Poore breaks a record among ex-county officials. Until February 28, eight former and present county treasurers, in regular succession were still living. Mr. Poore was the oldest ex-treasurer, going into office in 1904. From his incumbency to his death there was a span of thirty years.

Here's the very unusual record of successive county treasurers, without a casualty, until Mr. Poore's demise:

John B. Poore 1904-1908
Wilmer W. Cornell 1908-1912
William K. Fine 1912-1916
E. E. Althouse 1916-1920
A. Harry Clayton 1920-1924
William H. Murphy 1924-1928
Henry S. Johnson 1928-1932
Leidy M. Landis 1932-1934

It would be of much interest to know the record of vitality of the Ex-Sheriffs, Ex-Recorders of Deeds, Ex-Registers of Wills, Commissioners, Prothonotaries, Judges and other county office-holders.

May we add that no one now living recalls a betrayal of trust, defalcation or any of the everyday lapses of public officials, in Bucks County row offices. Every incumbent lifted his term of public service to a high plane. Possibly the "honor system," faithful performance of a public trust, has something to do with long life.

The record, at least, is quite in contrast with the thousands in all walks of life who proved faithless to their calling, ending all via the pistol, a leap from a tall building, carbon monoxide gas, etc.—Sellersville Herald.

Another Review Of Opera Presentations

Modernism and modernists, together with certain critics can claim that there is something more complicated, complex and powerful in modern music, but the public cannot enjoy anything more charming and more effective than the music of "Lucia." Even the orchestration under the serious leadership of a master such as Vincenzo Bellezza, shows itself to be richer in quality and less than the upstart of art believe to be.

The public in general, in the great majority, pays little or no attention to them. Their preference and love as it was of their grandparents before them, is for the music of the old Italian school and that of "Lucia" in particular, in which there runs through the whole work a current of tenderness and human passion expressed in simple but fervent melodies, which appeal to the heart, for more than one hundred of years and gives immense pleasure without tedium. It has filled and will always fill the theatres when there is to be heard music like that of Donizetti and other old Italian masters.

"Lucia" is meant to delight chiefly through the beautiful—bel canto—as it was given and sung last Tuesday night, and I repeat, it was a brilliant performance.

Lilly Pons, as should be expected, was unique and took the lion's share of the ovations. Giovanni Martinelli, who is still the "top tenor of them all," was superb through the opera, and in the last act, was masterful. His voice was more lyrically and beautifully bell-like clear and powerful than ever. Dramatically no living tenor can reach the heights of his sincerity, even if at times it becomes a trifle too enthusiastic. But enthusiasm is his second nature and he certainly deserved his ovation, prolonged and general.

The baritone, Bonelli, was also great, for both voice and acting, and very good were all the other artists who took part in the performance. All were well received and justly applauded. The next Metropolitan performance will be "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," by Wagner, and will be sung in German.

the rest of the world as for America itself.

"For it would give all the rest of the world an example, and would give hope that we can achieve a happier world without first going through an unhappier one, with all the destruction and loss that revolution always implies."

I remarked that John Maynard Keynes, the English economist, had expressed the same opinion. Keynes had put it a little more on the negative side and had said that if the NRA failed it would mean the loss of the only perceptible hope that the capitalist world could be reorganized without violence. King Boris, famous as probably the most modest king alive, was pleased, but had not seen Keynes' statement.

"For my part," he went on, "I feel that if any nation can achieve this it ought to be the American. I had the opportunity to observe the American character here in the Balkans after the war."

"You may remember," and he smiled, "that Bulgaria and America, though on opposite sides, never went to war. I saw your relief work after the war, your Y. M. C. A. and American Relief Administration, and I observed the deep humanity of the American character. It seems to me that this is one very important and necessary element for the achievement of success in solving the crisis by the American method, for an interest in humanity is of course essential if anything is to be done for humanity."

"And if the American experiment succeeds, and thereby a general economic recovery sets in throughout the world, I am convinced that the danger of war will be done away with."

The king had been extremely interested in the undertaking to investigate throughout Europe the prospects of war and peace. He had set forth that one of the best reasons to believe there would be no war in the near future was because there were still too many men living who had experienced the last war, and had repeated the opinion of many observers that the greatest immediate menace to peace was the growth of the war spirit among the youth of Germany, and the general fact that so much time had elapsed that already all men under thirty-four are too young to have experienced the last war.

The youth of Germany had abandoned the bourgeois ideal of making a living, and had chosen instead the heroic ideal to fight and die for their fatherland. But it was true that the economic crisis had made it practically impossible for the youth of Germany to follow the normal, bourgeois ideal so that the heroic path was the only one left to them.

The king, taking up the thread of this argument, pursued it to its logical conclusion, namely that if the youth could be afforded the opportunity for normal, peaceful and profitable economic activity they would seize it. Furthermore that if the trade barriers which now stifle international commerce and which have resulted from the economic crisis could be eliminated there would be eliminated at the same time one of the most potent war menaces.

"I believe," declared the king, "that it is the toxins of economic crisis that produce most of the friction in today's world, and once these toxins are removed I am convinced that our generation of men who have experienced the last war will allow nothing to drag us once more into futile, useless and destructive conflict which could ultimately result in nothing but catastrophe for the whole world. For Bulgaria's part, we have had enough of war, and our sincerest wish is, that we may never have another."

No head of a state in Europe has failed to subscribe to that statement of peaceful intent, but from few of them is it so impressive as from the king of Bulgaria. He is the head of a state that began fighting in 1912. Bulgaria had two more years of war than Western Europe. The king himself served at the front.

The end of 1918 left Bulgaria reduced in size and impoverished. Yet among all the states which lost the war Bulgaria is the only one that has been quiet and quite unwarlike in its complaints against the treaties.

It seems to a hasty visitor that Bulgaria is sincerely determined to keep the peace. Observers here declare that in case a war should break out between Germany and France, Bulgaria at any rate would make a mighty effort to stay out of it. Her king knows too much about war. He knows too much about revolution. In a curious way King Boris, monarch and half the age of the octogenarian Republican, President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia, approximates the philosophical approach of Masaryk to politics. President Masaryk said war could not come because nations were too poor. King Boris believes war will not come because nations will become less poor if the NRA in America succeeds. Both monarch and republican unite in believing war will not come. That at any rate is some consolation for jittery Europe.

SPORT

WALSH THINKS THAT
HORNSBY HAS GOOD TEAMBy Davis J. Walsh
(I. N. S. Sports Editor)

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., Mar. 10.—(INS)—Hitherto, I'd had the idea, not altogether uncommon, that Mr. Rogers Hornsby was a cold, unfeeling man who went about sneering from left to right in a very dastardly way. Today, I found him pleasant, affable, informative though modest and, all told, a very good guy; so good, in fact that I even came away thinking that he had a good ball club, which is par and "tops" in the personality dodge. Even Mr. Hornsby doesn't think he has a good ball club.

By his own estimate, the St. Louis Browns have improved by as much as 25 per cent. since he took them over last Summer. But, any way you figure it, 25 per cent. of nothing is liable to make a grand total of very little. The Browns are better, so is Wall Street. The difference, in fact, is a little subtle, just a slight shading. The Browns happen to know what's the matter with them.

They need a shortstop. They need a third baseman. The former may turn out to be Allen Strange, who hit .324 in the Coast League. It seems to me there's always somebody like that around a ball club in the Spring. Sometimes, they suffice; all too often they don't. As for the third baseman it might be almost anybody, with the possible exception of John A. Heydler.

"I may be out there myself playing third base on my knees," Mr. Hornsby confessed this morning. "I have two other candidates in mind but if they don't come through, I'll be elected. Otherwise, the club looks pretty sound. We'll have some pitching for a change; I'll stake the right side of my infield against anybody's; the outfield gets by and so does the catching. I'm not worrying; and that's where I have it on a lot of clubs who think they're going somewhere in this league."

The two third basemen who may keep Mr. Hornsby off his own anatomy, which is becoming elderly and tender, are Scharen, a 1933 regular, and Harlin Cliff, up from San Antonio.

Strange has looked the part so far, but he hasn't started to let his hair down yet and the curve-ball pitchers won't be going to work on him for weeks. Nevertheless, the job is his until such time as he indicates that he can't hold it. The other two infield positions can be dismissed in a few words, the first being Burns and the second Melillo. Mr. Hornsby feels pretty good about that part of it.

Also about this: he traded one outfielder, Carl Reynolds, and took in exchange one pitcher, Paul Andrews, and one shortstop, Strange. Then with the money left over, he bought two outfielders, Pucietelli and Ray Pepper, who had been the minor league property of the rival club, the Cardinals.

Another place where the gentleman feels that he might have done himself proud was in taking title to Bill McAfee and Ed Becht, pitchers. The Cubs once paid $75,000 for Becht when Mr. Hornsby was there and he still thinks the man is good.

April meeting when the tax rate will be set.

A woman received slight injuries and ten other persons were shaken up yesterday in a collision between a bus and an automobile on the Lincoln Highway near Langhorne. Mrs. John Brown, 50 years old, of 24 Arendel street, Philadelphia, received bruises and shock and was treated at the scene by Corporal R. D. Evans, of the Langhorne Highway Patrol. Russell Denner, 43 years old, of 5 Willow Place, Great Neck, N. Y., driver of the car in which Mrs. Brown was a passenger, escaped injury.

Denner was driving east on the highway when his car skidded and crashed head-on into a bus owned by the Jersey Central Bus Company, and driven by Charles F. Bender, of 2552 Rector street, Philadelphia.

Delegates and other members from various fire companies in Bucks County, will attend tonight the quarterly meeting of the Bucks County Firemen's Association at Quakertown. The Quaker West End Company, of Quakertown, will be host to the visiting firemen. James Groom, of Yardley, president of the association, will preside.

An interesting program has been arranged and aside from the reports of the officers and committees there will be several interesting addresses. The quarterly report of William L. Stackhouse, county fire marshal, will also be given, and there will be the nomination of officers.

The annual meeting of the association will be held in June at Newtown when the officers will be elected. There will also be a firemen's parade as a part of the convention and the latter will also be held in connection with the week's activities and parades to be held in observance of the 250th anniversary of Newtown Borough.

The parade which has for many years been a feature of the annual convention of the firemen has been dispensed with of recent years because of the depression, but this year it will be added as a part of the convention again.

School Board Asks
Drastic Tax Levy Action

MORRISVILLE, Mar. 10.—Because of the serious financial condition of the schools, members of the Finance Committee of the Board of Education together with the secretary and supervising principal met Tuesday night with the Tax Collector to go over the tax duplicate and after finding that there was still $28,555.60 outstanding on the 1933 duplicate of $82,665.72, the collector was authorized to proceed to take drastic steps after March 15 to collect the outstanding balance.

Members of the Board reported that it will require at least $25,000 to finish the school term and they expressed the belief that a lot of this outstanding money can and should be collected. The subject of many property owners, who are collecting rents on business and other properties, and then failing to pay their taxes but permitting them to be levied against the property at Doylestown, was the subject of discussion and the collector was authorized to attach the rents of these properties, if the taxes are not paid before March 15. It was pointed out that the Borough and School District cannot function if the property

The Basque Bounds Back

By BURNLEY

HENRI COCHET and Martin Plas, the French professionals, headed the Gallic tennis invasion that now continues with the advent of the famous bounding Basque, Jean Borotra. This spectacular French veteran starts shooting for the National Indoor crown in the tourney that opens today in New York.

The present holder of the title, Gregory Mangin, of Newark, has won the indoor diadem for the last two years, and seems to be supreme on the wooden floors over here. Borotra is at his best indoors, and has won the U. S. indoor title three times in the past, so he will certainly provide a real test for the "Newark Bulldog," as the boys have dubbed Mangin.

Borotra is the last of France's famous Three Musketeers of the amateur game. La Coste has retired because of poor health, while Cochet is now a professional and is competing with Vines and Tilden in this country.
